Introduction.....Q: Dealing with multiple deployment methods within a product? I'm curious about how you guys deal with deploying different deployments within a product? We are currently developing a software product that offers 2 modes of updates. We offer an automatic update to users that enable the users to update their own instances of the software, and we offer an update via a "hotfix" to users that we manually update on a regular basis. We are curious as to how most companies handle this? How are they able to achieve this? What are some methods you guys have used? A: There are 2 approaches to deployment. Have one set of binaries that get pushed to all customers. This is essentially a "push ba244e880a
